

ZULF EXPLAINS HOW BANK OF NEW YORK AND I HAVE UNCANNY SHARING OF VALUES AND CIVILISED NORMS AND BILL GATES DIFFERS FROM US

You see Zulf is Bengali-Persian ethnic, and I am an American by immigration and Life. And yet I claim that Almost all the executives of Bank of New York Mellon and I share almost all of our values without problems and Bill Gates differs from us. The analogy is this. You see I am like a Roman Citizen and so are Bank of New York executives. We believe that Natural Rights of all men (and women) are sacred and we get outraged when our American Government does not secure Natural Rights of people. That's not Progressive or Conservative by the way. That's acceptance of Classical Liberal moral order. Amazingly enough every single executive of Bank of New York Mellon and I will actually share Classical Liberal moral order. We will share this deeply and without comment. Why is this, you might wonder. Well I went to a multi-ethnic high school in New York and then to Princeton and it so happens that we were mostly born during the postwar American World Order and so we all absorbed Natural Rights sacredness. We'll share these values in the end with 78% of the human race. And we will share outrage at violations of Natural Rights at any lunchtime conversation, because it's part of our idea of Civilised norms in the world.

And Bill Gates will keep repeating "Natural Rights are claptrap" and claim to represent a White Tribal Superiority World Order and so on. These sorts of political dreams are far from Civilised norm in 2021. I and Bank of New York will represent Civilisation and I can guarantee that the moment White Tribal Superiority is mentioned we will all instantly consider it to be fringe extremist barbaric position. That's because we're Romans and Bill Gates types are Ostrogoths ready to sack Rome.

Now we will differ on subtle issues. I might think that fatherhood is extremely important and is neglected by the Progressives and so on and maybe some of the BoNY folks will say that it is a "Conservative talking point" without having studied the issues of single mother child-rearing and statistical properties of single mother children etc. But those are minor. We will have substantial commonality.

We might differ as well as how much rough street language is appropriate in writing, especially if some of them are not New Yorkers from youth. I am a New Yorker from youth and know where all the great Jewish bagel stores are and can twok and have kwofi quite well thank you very much. They know what sort of cat I am quite easily at some levels. They wouldn't know other things, like how to survive murderers in Thompkins Square park early in the morning when you're hobo. Well we're unique and have unique talents.

On the other hand we are all used to reading Financial Times and Economist and The New Yorker on weekends. Except I am a smoker so I have a coffee and a cigarette etc. And they might even know East Village as well as I do.

Anyway, we're not exactly the same. Ok?
