

HUMAN MALES DID NOT "EVOLVE" ANY CAPACITY TO RAPE

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

I was reading Dupre's book and came upon one of the silliest statements I have ever heard. The proposition that "Men have evolved a capacity to rape". This is total rubbish. This is like saying human beings have evolved a capacity to break their bones from falling off bicycles. I cannot stand the idiots who come up with this sort of nonsensical idiotic propositions.

1. WHY ARE RAPE RATES UNIVERSALLY LOW?

Let's take some of this highest rape rates in the world from 2013. Sweden 58.54, Iceland 55.32, United States 35.85, Belgium 29.99, Norway 22.35. These are representative figures.

All of these are in 100,000 per year. The complement gives us 99.94%. In other words, every year assuming each of the rapes were by different men, 99.94% of the men are not involved in a rape. For us, it is still not high enough because we have a relative sense. But from my point of view this is remarkably low for the human race, and that is an enigma. How did we, as a species, manage to avoid the situation of the chimpanzees, where maybe 80% of children are born off 'rape'? The rather wonderful feature of human race is that 99.94% is the least percent of non-rapists in the population, and so almost all men never rape women. I find this regularity of rather good behaviour to be impressive because it could be Hobbesian jungle of rapes the moment the police look the other way. But it is not. This was the product of millions of years of evolution that our men are remarkably well-behaved with our women, and much more in the poor countries than in some of the Western wealthy countries. Obviously 0.06% maximum is aberrant behaviour. And so this wonderful feature of our race requires some examination. It is most certainly not explained by any particular religion. For otherwise why would the regularity be globally uniform.

I want to set up the context of my universal viewpoint with this observation.

2. ZULF'S EXPLANATION OF RAPE RATES

The human organism is extremely delicate. There is no genetic adaptation for rapes. That is just a ridiculously bad and incompetent scientific perspective. Rather, emotional intelligence, social intelligence, initial attachment, all of the early childhood and adolescent growth of a boy requires care and old cultures have naturalised in their culture the care necessary by various rituals and habits. New pressures on human beings are based on total lack of regard for actual psychological needs and natural care needs of individuals, arrogant in beliefs of political or commercial nature, these put strains on the natural systems that are actually evolutionary adaptations and have nothing to do with rape. These systems all malfunction at increasing rates under stress, and rapists pop out of the woodwork. This is super obvious to anyone who is sane.