

ROBER MUSIL'S INTERESTING THEORY OF DISTRUST OF PEOPLE

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

Bill Gates is obviously an inferior creature to me in every possible way. I am a glorious immortal genius and an Archangel of Heaven with contributions to human race that will forever transform positively the trajectory of the future of of humanity, my beloved people. Bill Gates is a hick illiterate charlatan who has been a deceptive pathological liar for his entire life whose best contribution to humanity would be a video recording of being beaten to a pulp with every bone in his body broken and then his body set on fire after some highly inflammable liquid is poured on his bloody body with wait just long enough for it to seep into his blood giving him excruciating pain before the flame engulfs his physical form completely leaving the world uncorrupted by his evil.

This not is not about this but about a slightly different topic. It is about hostility between human beings. The issue arises to my mind from reading a chapter of Robert Musil's The Man Without Qualities.

The protagonist is Ulrich who is beset at night by three men in an urban setting. He 'chooses to see them as spontaneous materialisation of free floating hostility.' Intriguing to me is the commentary from Ulrich's mind. "Regrettably, a great many people nowadays feel antagonistic toward a great many other people. It is a basic trait of civilisation that man deeply mistrusts those who are outside his own circle, so it is not only the Teuton who looks down on the Jew but also the soccer player who regards the pianist as an incomprehensible and inferior creature."

These are the ideas that are most fascinating to me because not long ago I was doing some statistical analysis on models of closeness and hostility of people using data from World Values Survey. The use of the language here is quite interesting, for they are 'looks down' and 'as an inferior creature' and Ulrich's general theory of the circle. I don't tend to look down on anyone at all, but this is due to having refined cultivation and manners. I am intrigued by some of these thoughts of Musil and respect his genius enough to examine these issues a bit.

One possibility is a model where this sort of 'ethnic pride' of the current moment functions in part in this sort of way. I am a Princetonian in America, with extremely good cultivation that is infinitely better than Bill Gates and so I will never accept Bill Gates as even my equal for his inferior education let alone my superior but he seems to feel that he is superior to me because he is white.

And these are matters of such profound implications for the world that I will have to examine them with care and possibly resolve these issues once and for all for all of humanity. Now Robert Musil is quite an intelligent man, so he is worth examining more carefully, for inspiration if not for answers.

But before we move on I want to assure the world once again, since I have been badly disserved by the United States government and Bill Gates had broken all laws of nations and international law and all moral code of all religions and have destroyed many layers of my deep interior and blood meta for purely evil disgusting parasitic activity. This man, Bill Gates, is not only inferior to me morally and in every other way, but is disgusting, parasitic, evil and this is known to Asia, Europe, and United States Government as well.

No, whites are not 'intrinsically superior' which is the firm conviction of this wretched miserable abomination that is Bill Gates. As a matter of fact, it was the founders of the United States who hit upon one of the most profound insights of all of human history: We believe that all men are created equal and are endowed with their Creator certain natural rights, that among them are Life, Liberty, and Pursuit of Happiness. This is one of the true marvels of the entire Western Civilisation. No, whites are most certainly not intrinsically superior; it was non-white man of Mesopotamia and then Egypt who invented the foundations of all civilisation, and so it is an absurd notion that 'whites are intrinsically superior', and one of the greatest difficulties for a harmonious world.