

THE MANNER OF A MAN'S DENIGRATION REVEALS HIS SOUL AS WELL

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

I am not always perfect in my manner of denigration, but the method of denigration shows a man's soul. Those, like Bill Gates, who are ignoble and low use denigration methods that are ignoble and low. They are as ugly and disgusting in their denigration as they are in their arrogance and ostentation.

The beautiful soul knows that grace in positive virtues is matched by the methods of denigration, and does not stoop to sordid and vile and low methods of denigration.

Bill Gates is rather foolish to use sordid methods, low methods of denigration with me, for I have several thousand years of aristocratic blood in my veins, and my soul is noble quite naturally. It will be quite devastating in the end how he demeans himself far more than he will me by his methods. In America, two hundred million Americans are aware of natural order of loftiness in nobility, whether they express these or not, as these are the heritage of Europe's long civilisational history. Who will respect a prominent American without taste in his denigration?

Bill Gates is not worthy, as a man, as a businessman, and American people were ill-served by all the authorities who had held him in high esteem. He is not worthy of any esteem at all.
