

THE DEEP SOURCES OF NATURAL RIGHTS THEORY OF JOHN LOCKE AND THOMAS JEFFERSON

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

The Natural Rights theory of John Locke did not exist at all before he began formulating it. These were developments from the Enlightenment period, and the luminaries included besides Thomas Jefferson also Jean-Jacques Rousseau and others. Now I am an independent thinker, and for many decades of my life I have had the chance to ponder issues such as Liberty, the security by government of individual Liberty, and so on. I happen to be a man who finds people's attempts to coerce, manipulate and use other people to be extremely distasteful. Some of my family members think this is a matter of great pride to attempt to coerce people. I could not tolerate these things. Over time you come to truly understand how sacred is the individual man's right to convictions of his conscience. When I was young and naive, I just thought that good and bad were just mostly known and did not appreciate that deep convictions have any individual component. They do, and the sanctity of individual conscience must be preserved for Civilisation to operate. So on this I am in full agreement with the Founders of my country America. But what is to me surprising to me is just how lax United States Senate and United States Government are to duty of securing Natural Rights of people who are not 'big'. This is not a minor flaw but a disaster that will destroy the United States of America. Natural Rights of people include their right to hold their conscience and convictions without interference. Bill Gates is a criminal who is dangerous for the human race, and he is continuously not murdered and obliterated as a threat to the United States. These are not positive developments. It is a fundamental human psychological need to hold true to one's moral convictions. There are grave consequences when this is not understood. Conscience gives the expression of our deep inner nature, and is essential for life itself. The failure for political authority to take these seriously causes nations to be burned down to the ground. I hope that US Senators are not foolish enough to continue down this horrible path they have chosen of catering to a tribal racist like Bill Gates instead of obliterating him with heavy bombing.

1. ORIGIN OF MY POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY

My political philosophy took a long time to produce concrete strong convictions. It did not start with a spark from the US Declaration of Independence actually. Originally it was influenced by Percy Bysshe Shelley's Prometheus Unbound. It was also influenced by moral thought of Fyodor Dostoevsky and Franz Kafka and other elements. There are Bengali influences too, to be sure, but I did rebel against religious Islam early in my life, and so I was rather distant from many things Bengali. There is no lack of ethnic and bloodline pride here, but I am genuinely a Republic spirit. And my convictions were tempered by my Socialist years. My views have gone through many strong checks and turns and so on, and I am not strictly Classical Liberal in all things.

Nevertheless, it will be quite difficult for anyone to find someone whose pure faith and convictions are more aligned towards universal Natural Rights as myself and that is the sacred core of American Political theory. You will not find many white Americans who understand Natural Rights as much as I do either, because it's easier to understand Natural Rights in America where there are no tribal tugs and pulls in a Universal manner.
