

THE SONNY BOY BILL GATES NEEDS FAMILIARITY WITH DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

The Sonny Boy Bill Gates is deficient in his early education and knows nothing about American political organisation and history and needs a lesson, eh?

Well, Bill Gates, the United States of America is a multi-ethnic classical liberal democratic republic. Now don't get confused classical liberalism is a political philosophy that developed in Europe during Enlightenment and Romanticism eras. It is related but distinct from what is called 'political liberalism' in America today. America is a Democracy but it is not a pure Democracy. It was already a functioning Democracy in the nineteenth century when the great Frenchman Alexis de Toqueville decided to come to America and study it. He wrote two volumes from his ruminations, appropriately called Democracy in America. You see, I am a Princetonian, and I actually took university courses which covered the great books and passed exams and have reasonable familiarity with the content. You are an American by birth, and so your political opinions are respected as a single person's vote. You are allowed to vote for the state senator, the local representative who can then represent pooled interests in the Legislature which has an upper house called the US Senate, and a lower house called US House of Representatives. In addition you can vote for the US President who is then the leader of the Executive Branch of US Government.

Your lack of education leads you to have an ambition to be the Monarch of the United States of America. That is not an option that the United States Government will be able to grant you, Bill Gates. You might think you have some clever ways to achieving this goal, but alas, no amount of cleverness will lead to your being accepted as a Monarch of America. Those are against the governments fundamental DNA.

1. EXPLANATION FOR WHY US GOVT CONSIDERS ME AMERICAN

I have Permanent Residency in the United States from 1997 that expires 2031. This is evidence for all legitimate government organisations in America and around the world that I am American. Bill Gates is confused about this, which is reasonable because he does not understand Democratic politics at all.

The United States was founded in 1776 by a Declaration of Independence from England. At the time, it was peopled by various immigrants from Europe as well as some other parts of the world. The Founders of America decided to form a multi-ethnic classical liberal democratic republic. There is a Constitution that serves as the fundamental charter of the country which includes the Declaration of Independence. All official positions held by the United States Government evolved by Democratic politics including the issues of who is and who is not American according to the US Government.

That Democratic Process involved the formation of a government agency to handle immigration and citizenship of people. The agency was not given arbitrary right to dictate who is American and who is not. Instead, there was public democratic controversies throughout the mid nineteenth century all the way throughout twentieth century about immigration, procedures for who can be American and who cannot, and so on. The Democratic politics in a Republic took the shape of debates in the House and Senate throughout the roughly 150 years, as different factions vied for putting their views into law. So the immigration and citizenship agency was mandated to implement the resulting laws of the Republic. Over time, the laws were complex enough that professional training was required to process citizenship and immigration.

My Permanent Residency approved in 1997 by the US Citizenship and Immigration Services, the current designation of the agency followed all the laws that were applicable to vet and process my legitimacy to be considered American by US Government. Now since my Permanent Residency is valid and more than two decades old, it is just a formality for seeking American Citizenship. I just consider myself ordinary American for this reason.

You, Bill Gates will find that it is impossible to impose your will and demand that I not be considered American. That's because by 1965, the Immigration Act of 1965 had settled many controversies regarding ethnic restrictions on being granted full Citizenship in America. The popular will is not going to budge by your arbitrary demand for return to ethnicity orientation. Your demands that I not be considered American by the US Government is dead in water; it is not possible for the US Government to accomodate that demand.

2. I AM ASIAN-AMERICAN

I am not particularly interested in factional politics in Washington, but I am Asian-American technically. My origin is Bengal and ethnicity Bengali-Persian, and you can see that Bengal is close to Vietnam and so I am Asian-American. My politics is Universal Human Race, and I won't be joining solidarity marches in Washington with Asian-American identity. As a matter of fact I am just as comfortable with white Americans and black Americans and Europeans as I am with other Asian-Americans.
