

ZULF'S STRONG DIVISION BETWEEN PUBLIC SPHERE AND PRIVATE SPHERE

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

I am formally extremely tolerant of diversity of political opinions in the public sphere but I am extremely strongly resistant to letting public sphere riffraff enter my sacred private sphere. I will not allow any feminists come even near the gates of my private sphere in a million years. But I am respectful of feminists in the public sphere. For me this is quite clear. I am not rude but I can't deal with or tolerate feminism at all in my private sphere.

Now this will seem strange to some but it's just reasonable for me. You see I guard my private sphere as important to myself and it's not where all possible political nonsense is allowed. It's my life, and I am sexually liberal in the public sphere but not in the private sphere. This works out because I really could not give a damn about other people's private lives and do not tolerate incursions by anyone into mine.

I do hold liberal views, including Natural Rights Security for all men and all women. I don't think women ought to be unfairly treated and so on. But that's universal position and I will definitely support any woman facing natural rights breaches seriously. But no feminism in my private life, thank you very much.

1. MY EGO IS NOT PARTICULARLY VULNERABLE TO WOMEN NOT FINDING ME APPROPRIATE AS THEIR MATE

So many years ago in my twenties, my wife left me after four years of marriage and some very happy times. In time I adapted and my ego was never again really ever vulnerable to a woman not finding me appropriate to be a permanent romantic partner. My heart was not so robust. But my ego is mature. I never allow a woman finding me attractive or not wound my pride or ego. It's their choice what they want to find attractive, not mine, and it seemed irrational for me to depend on their fleeting affects to sustain my self-esteem. My self-esteem has deeper roots within myself. It is fairly robust to what women find me attractive and stay with me and what women are suddenly in love with some other man. Those things, I learned young, are not in my control and I do not seek such control.
