WHICH MANAGER TOLD BILL GATES TO HAVE FAVOURITE ART?

Zulf wants to announce a great mysterious open question. I have heard recently that Cezanne is allegedly in Bill Gates' favourite art, and he brought a Leonardo Da Vinci original I saw for Xanadu 2.0.

No given the truth that Bill Gates is the most tacky, uncultured, illiterate, undereducated, tasteless, disgusting fuck who pines to walk around with jars of feces even in crowded gatherings, the question is who told him about Da Vinci and Cezanne? Those are pretty good actually. I mean it's not Hermann Broch and Robert Musil and Rainer Maria Rilke and Thomas Mann and Percy Bysshe Shelley and Andrei Tarkovsky and various other posh taste of mine, but it's not totally crappy. So who really told him to get those to fake having any taste? That is the mystery.

You see Bill Gates is a hick peasant-born son of a bitch from the provincial boondocks in nowheresville in far-out-there frontiers of Pacific Northwest. It is difficult to fathom for me how the uncouth boy without any taste or cultivation could have come up with Cezanne or Da Vinci at all without enormous amount of assistance. Perhaps it was his ex-wife's influence. The sonny boy himself is surely incapable of having any reasonable taste at all.
