

AN ELEMENTARY NOTE FOR BILL GATES ON WHY EDUCATED PEOPLE AROUND THE WORLD FOLLOW THE LAW

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

I was born early morning to Khondkar Miran Ahmed and Sadiqua Ferdause Ahmed, a Bengali couple. It was early morning, in a clinic in an area called Dhanmondi in Dhaka. Very early in life I came to understand that at least my grandparents were prominent in society. My father's father was in Bangladesh government in charge of Forestry. My mother's father was a successful Electrical Engineer with various deals with England and other international players. They both had illustrious houses with various gardens and gated compounds and multiple storey buildings.

My father's family is strongly Anglophile and his cousins are all highly educated in various parts of East and West. I learned early in life that one follows the law because Civilisation arose from laws. I don't even think about breaking laws knowingly because I know that even if I don't like some law or other, that in the birth of Civilisation one has Codes of Ur-Nammu and Hammurabi in Mesopotamia, and to be great, I thought, when I was young, was just a matter of inventing even more interesting and clever laws that would make life better for everyone. It never ever occurred to me that one ought to break laws. Of course I did have some relapses. I shoplifted a pack of tarot cards once when I was hobo, and a candy bar when I was having fun in graduate school. But that is the sum total of laws broken by Zulfikar Moinuddin Ahmed. I never reached the point of ever thinking, "Hey, I can break all these laws over here." The thought never actually materialised. I was arrested once when I was hobo for sleeping on a Park bench in New York in 2008 in the evening. And another time in a park got picked up by cops for eating a bagel near kids playing. Their problem was my zipper was open. They actually thought I was sexually aroused by kids playing. That was not what was going on. I just forgot to check my zipper in the morning and was excited about a bagel with cheese and fried eggs and a coffee and sat down in a park to eat.

Around 95% of people on Earth who even have a mild sort of education are opposed to breaking laws. Why? Because if everyone follows laws, their own standard of living increases. Moreover, most people do trust that international organisations are working on hard problems that have a beneficial effect.

I am just astounded by how much contempt Bill Gates has for US Law and US and International Authorities. He literally wants to be the Global Despot. How the hell is Bill Gates going to be the Global Despot if he does not respect laws himself? He says he has 'white right' to cut into my eyes and do enormous harm to my life, liberty, mind. He is very funny. He of course has no right to do these things. But he literally expects that he will do these things and yet be able to be the latter day Hammurabi. Now that is really funny. A man with utter contempt for all laws and legal authority and Natural Rights literally is also convinced that he will be a latter day Hammurabi.

Let me sniffle and laugh for a while and return to this because that is just outrageously funny.

1. BILL GATES' EXCUSE FOR NOT FOLLOWING LAWS

Bill Gates is so stupid he literally thinks that repeating "I am big" gives him total immunity from penalties for breaking law, that US Laws do not apply to him and that International Laws do not apply to him. This is the most remarkably dull idea I have ever heard from anyone let alone a US businessman. That's just totally retarded. US Declaration and US Constitution does not have any 'big clause' where laws do not apply to someone with this immunity to law. The idea is probably appealing to five year old children with narcissistic idea of how they are special. But at 66 Bill Gates still prances around and without any shame or embarrassment keeps repeating "I'm big" with the meaning that laws do not apply to him and that he ought to be immune to punishment even for murders – which he has committed many times with meta manipulations leading to stopped breathing and others. He has been attempting this with me for more than a year now but since I am not meta enough my organic body has compensated.

There is no "big exemption" for law in any country. That's just the dumbest, most illiterate, stupidest, most ignorant idea that has ever been suggested by anyone above four.

2. BILL GATES IS NO AMERICAN MAVERICK

Bill Gates used huge amounts of power that is illegitimate such as vile black magic power outlawed in Europe in 13th century (discovered by FBI) and huge amounts of power destroying my personal ethnic meta, damaging my mind, using military hard meta to cut my flesh in meta, etc. These things are not American Maverick matter but pure Evil un-American matter.

We in America respect the non-conformist independent maverick only when they share American values (such as securing of Natural Rights for everyone as right and good). We do not respect Evil people who harm other people for their creative inspiration. Virtually without exceptions, all Americans will hate and detest Bill Gates for the harm that he considers to be quite routine against other people's Natural Rights.
