

POWER DOES NOT MAKE ONE SUPERIOR

Bill Gates keeps repeating 'whites are superior' and when asked why keeps saying 'because power makes one superior'. I want to formally refute this claim by a classical example. Forgive my straightforward quoting from Wikipedia.

Quintus Aurelius Memmius Symmachus (died 526) was a 6th-century Roman aristocrat, an historian and a supporter of Nicene Orthodoxy. He was a patron of secular learning, and became the consul for the year 485. He supported Pope Symmachus in the schism over the Popes' election, and was executed with his son-in-law Boethius after being charged with treason.

Symmachus was superior in almost every Civilised metric than the barbaric Ostrogoth King Theodoric. Even though he was executed by Theodoric who had more power, he was the superior of the two. He was patrician and highly educated, and wrote seven volumes on the history of Rome. Theodoric was a barbaric brute and the Ostrogoths sacked Rome.

Most people around the world would agree that Symmachus was the superior of the two. This classical example can be followed by millions of other examples where one with higher power is inferior.

More mundane examples include every mass shooter who kills all sorts of doctors and lawyers and professors randomly. They have more power in these instances and are decidedly inferior.

Now in particular arena such as war, the side with higher power can be considered superior for war and not in all ways. Bill Gates' notion that power makes one superior is in the same league as murderers and other vile violent criminals who want to have criminal power to threaten people's lives. No one in Civilised world can accept his criterion. Indeed, most children around the world know better.