

THE TRAGIC FATE THAT BEFELL BILL GATES: PRE-POST MORTEM

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

Now that we are nearing the Tragic Fate That Befell Bill Gates, we can pause and examine some of the errors that he committed. The first error is that he trusted an arbitrary "White Race" tribe, expecting all the people in this arbitrary tribe to be loyal to him. Now I am much wiser than Bill Gates and do not expect even my own dear brother of the same father and mother to be loyal to me when his interests are more important to him than mine. I don't understand idiots who are above around 15 who expect vast millions of people to be loyal to them at all, let alone by arbitrary criteria. It's like me walking out in the middle of the day to Central Park and having a sudden conviction that all New Yorkers will be loyal to me and give their lives for me the moment I snap my fingers. I am wise and on those moments, quickly check to see the origin of the marijuana because I'm getting more from the same supplier! Hydroponic weed has some good properties too. But thankfully, I enjoy the feeling without actually trying to provoke any serious situation to test it.

See, I do believe that my Beloved People is the Human Race, but I do not expect individual specific people to be in the mode of considering this to be an important factor in their lives.

I think this is Bill Gates' most tragic flaw, that he has all manner of great loyalty to 780 million people who do not actually share many values with him at all. That's tragic in a way, but even more tragic is his enormous hubris where he then uses this to justify cutting up the eyes of nonwhites and destroying their interior and being proud of it, as though he is a heroic warrior in a war for people who do not know that there was one. If he were not totally destructive and malevolent beyond all limits, this could be quite quixotic. Alas, his potential charming quixotic nature is marred by his outrageous malevolence and destruction. These things are only charming if the nature is good and virtuous. That's more Zulf than Bill. I am quite knight in shining armour in benevolence but I don't make enemies out of random people I do not know and cause great harm cutting up their eyes and destroying their ancestral, family, romantic, sexual, life, and other meta without any cause.

So that's another great problem. Bill Gates was born in 1955, but he is untouched by Civilisation.
