

ZULF DOES NOT THINK THAT ETHNICITY OF GENDER MATTERS FOR GREAT POLITICAL LEADERSHIP

Great political leaders are great souls; what matters for them are deep convictions for lofty ideals and a sense of universal justice that is instinctive. I am not particularly impressed by 'political correctness' on these issues. People should not be considered better candidates just because they are white males; neither should they be considered more appropriate just because they are either non-white or females. I am strongly opposed to both of these camps. I know a great soul when I see one, and they come in all ethnicities and can be both male and female. If they are not paragons of virtue and high ideals and have sense for doing the right thing for all people, they're not worthy. They can be as white male as they want they're not worthy; they can be as female or black or Indian as they please they're not worthy.
