

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT CANNOT HIRE PEOPLE WHOSE VIEW DIVERGE FROM AMERICAN VIEW

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

There is an American view about Government. It's not secret. The Founders of America pronounced the view during Declaration of Independence. It is that governments are instituted among men to secure Natural Rights. That is the American Canonical view. The US Declaration Preamble is part of our Constitution, foundation of all laws.

There is no ambiguity in the text. It is absolutely irrational to employ people in the US Government who do not understand or who disagree with the American Canonical view of Government. It's so absurd that it is like hiring fish merchants for heart surgery. Who can even understand this absurdity?

Every single employee in American government should have their employment terminated immediately if they disagree or fail to understand the American view of government.

I don't understand how it happens that an organisation brings into its fold people who do not understand the most basic things about what is a government and why it is instituted when American Founders worked very hard to put it in exact language in 1776. Until there is a Constitutional Convention to amend this view, United States should not be able to hire people who diverge in their understanding of American Canonical view.

I don't understand why I have to do this for Washington. Why can't they do anything right? I have disability, I have a thousand headaches, my legitimate income is blockaded by a criminal, $620 million and these shmucks in Washington are making me do work because they don't have third grade reading comprehension skills.
