

WHEN IS IT NOT COLD AND HEARTLESS TO ELIMINATE A MAN

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

I have been strongly against Capital Punishment for most of my life. I was liberal in New York and secular humanist throughout high school and my college years in Princeton. To put some concreteness, it is fair to say I was liberal and secular humanist between 1987-2003. I'll just tell you a bit about what changed in 2003. It was the Iraq war. Iraq war tugged my Conscience too much and I joined the International Socialist Organisation in San Francisco to protest the ravages of war in Iraq. So that was my move far left politically, and that lasted for some years till 2006 roughly and then I moved towards more fundamental republicanism by returning to my Romantic roots abandoning far left political views.

I can tell you a bit more about this. I grew up in a traditional Muslim environment in the East and had naturally just absorbed the idea that bad guys ought to be killed. Years around liberals in New York had softened my stance as I was swayed by many liberal Americans that it is not right for the state to assume the right to take lives because they cannot return it; there were so many wrongful death penalty convictions in the imperfect system of justice. Well now I am thoroughly convinced that death penalty is required absolutely but not for the poor people who have some chance of redemption but for people like Bill Gates who are habituated to murder and who feel entitled to murder as a right and impervious to the laws of the state. The problem, I realised, in the liberal view is that their spectrum of human nature is too narrow. Bill Gates' actual character and behaviour is far outside the range assumed in liberal thought and is not accounted for in liberal views of Capital Punishment.

I am a man of the heart and I have tremendous love and sympathy for the suffering of my beloved people the human race. I have my own self interests but even though I was not doing well financially, when the Houston flood occurred I sent $500 of money I did not really have to the victims. I have collected sandwiches from the trash thrown out early in the morning in Starbucks to distribute to homeless who were sleep deprived and weak in body and spirit in downtown New York in 2008.

Despite this soft side, I have strong views that people like Bill Gates who do not submit to US Government, and after 20 warnings by the US Government to stop violating death penalty worthy criminal laws refuse to exit the Deep Interior of an American Man – completely private space – claiming 'white right' in 2021, there is no coldness of heart to wipe him out with fierce and relentless military lethal force physically. That is not cold or heartless but is in fact showing respect and heart for much more deserving people, those who do not do those things. He does not deserve to live and government is right to wipe him out with extreme prejudice.

1. MY HONEST VIEW ABOUT BILL GATES

Bill Gates is so horrible, malevolent, thoroughly evil, so filled with evil intentions to harm innocent people, that I think in 1956 the white baby Bill Gates ought to have been machine gunned down in his podunk Seattle culture-less suburb and have baby blood splattered all over the walls and we should have admired the blood all over the walls and the mangled remains of Bill Gates the white baby with pleasure and admiration in our museums. That's what I think of Bill Gates.

2. MY SUPPORT FOR UNIVERSAL NATURAL RIGHTS

My view of Bill Gates is my assessment today, November 9 2021, of his value and character. I do not advocate harming babies of any ethnicity anywhere in the world since we do not have reliable way to be certain of their future character. Indeed, as I have argued elsewhere 'all men are created equal' is correct because  $G_c$  the genetic code in common is shared by all babies of all ethnicities and it is this that contains the evolutionary adaptations that dominate all people's character strengths and weaknesses. Bill Gates' character was not rotten during conception but rotted along the path of his development as a man.

There is no contradiction between my view of Universal Natural Rights Security which I believe is necessary and still strongly flawed on Earth today and my view of Bill Gates. Totally destroying him will improve Universal Natural Rights Security and not degrade it.
