

ZULF'S SKETCH OF PROGRAM TO REDUCE INTIMATE PARTNER VIOLENCE UNIFORMLY BELOW 0.1% FROM 10-16% AVERAGE

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

I am quite confident that moral virtues are the cause of intimate partner violence not in theory but in habituation. So I want around $4 trillion spent on this globally. I have shown that moral virtues improve individual Life Satisfaction so this is a Positive Psychology program rather than a criminal screening program.

I expect that in a decade or two the intimate partner violence will reduce below 0.1%. You also need to bring a lot of men out of feeling totally unable to produce masculine success and spiralling into cynicism. Use some of the money to get social activity of positive benefit that gives career training or other educational paths and so on. They need hope that there is hope coming for their future.

1. INTERESTING CAMBRIDGE THESIS OF J.-L. BARTON-CROSBY

The thesis of J. L. Barton-Crosby from 2018 explores the moral dimensions of intimate partner violence [?]. This is interesting, and I will not go into the details of her work. What I will emphasize, instead is that Virtue Ethics theory is superior to other types when dealing with moral judgment of humans and that habituation to higher moral virtues is required to have actual moral action that prevents IPV.
