

LLOYD AUSTIN PERSONALLY VOUCHES FOR ZULF AND PUTS GOVERNMENT PROTECTION FOR HIM

General Lloyd Austin personally vouches for Zulf and puts government protection on me. I am most grateful for this kind and generous gesture. He is African-American and not Asian-American. He was born in 1953 in Mobile, Alabama and raised in Thomasville, Georgia. He graduated West Point in 1975. Now you have to understand that in 1975, my baby brother – um my brother I mean – Feroze Alamgir Ahmed was just born. I was two then, and trying to get my mother to return him to the hospital that year after I got tired of playing with him. The Vietnam War was raging and I was too busy nearby, in Bengal, to give much of a damn. I thought the world was just made for me in those days. I knew my brother would be trouble and he monopolised my mother's affection throughout his life. He was much more charming than me. I was not that jealous in the end. But anyway, so my background is a bit different, but General Lloyd Austin has my gratitude. I am not an imposing fellow physically like he is, and I got shot around when was this let me calculate. I got shot I think in 1985. In Lalmatia, Dhaka, and I was in eighth grade in Scholastica in those days. I went to play with computer that one of my friends owned and he wanted to show me the gun his dad bought him and accidentally fired and a pellet bounced off a rib and lodged into my liver. Later, in New York I was medically excused from gym and physical education and became a studious sort of fellow, more cerebral and introverted than most people.

So we're not similar General Austin and myself, but we are American, and that's good. I have never had any Senior Government Official vouch for me before. Well, Bill Bradley did vouch for me in a letter in 1991 when I had to get a F-1 visa to attend Princeton. But I have Permanent Residency from 1997 and this is good. I will Naturalise when I get my money $620 million and get my life in order.
