"REPUTATION" CANNOT BE FAKED FOREVER

ZULFIKAR MOINUDDIN AHMED

What is Reputation? Reputation is an expectation of how something is. To me Netflix has a pretty good reputation. I watch some movies from Netflix and generally am satisfied with quality and selection and price. Netflix is relatively inexpensive. Now their selection is not as good as I would like. But it's not bad.

What about reputation of people? Well my reputation for Danish people is pretty good. I was there for a while and people were warm, friendly, kind, and pretty good to me. So I have a good opinion of Danes. I like them generally.

In these cases I told you about reputation based on experience. Now we don't want reputation based on lies.

Bill Gates is totally incensed that American moral values in a survey regarding beating a man's wife is less restrictive than many Muslim countries.

Let's dig into this one. I use World Values Survey results. I do not pay much heed to fake war propaganda dressed as 'information' about Muslims. I have read such total drivel in the past decade you would not even believe it. There was one propaganda piece that said Muslims had killed 600 million people. This just was too funny. There were 70 million deaths in the Second World War. And the last time Muslims had large scale killing was during the Crusades when the total world's population was not even a billion. When did Muslims cause such great genocidal murder? You see political propaganda is always going to be outrageous and fake.

I have heard some claims that Muslims have a thing for permissiveness to beating wife. My father was Muslim, and I cannot even imagine him actually being violent towards my mother. It's not a Muslim thing I ever knew. Now granted, I come from a posh high class family, but I don't remember this from before I was in New York at 13.

So let's take a look at America's distribution of how justifiable it is for a man to beat his wife first and we'll then take some Muslim countries to compare.

These surveys are real views of real people. They don't care about who thinks what. They are pretty honest. They were asked many questions, not just these.

So that gives you some data for comparison. Let's be fairly rough and look at not justified to 1-4 say for the sake of reasonable comparison, saying that maybe under exceptional situations it can be justified etc. Remember that these are issues of hypothetical situations and moral values. We want to check if it roughly makes sense that American men do not think that it is justifiable to beat one's wife but Muslim people do.

America is roughly same as Iraq and more permissive about beating wife than Iran, Turkey, and Pakistan. This to me is sensible. Note that 81% not thinking it's okay for a man to beat his wife within some bounds is not unreasonable measurement. Of course we want a world where this is 99.9% or whatever but reality is that human moral values do have a variation in the world.

	Level	United.States	Iran	Iraq	Pakistan	Turkey
1	Never justifiable	56.20	79.20	49.80	75.00	70.20
2	2	11.70	4.10	14.80	9.40	6.30
3	3	9.60	2.10	9.50	4.50	6.30
4	4	3.90	2.20	5.90	2.10	5.70
5	5	9.70	6.30	9.20	2.10	3.60
6	6	3.00	2.70	6.60	1.40	2.80
7	7	2.20	0.50	2.00	1.10	2.20
8	8	1.30	0.70	1.10	1.00	1.00
9	9	0.30	0.10	0.90	0.80	0.90
10	Always justifiable	1.00	2.00	0.10	1.40	0.40

	v
United.States	81.40
Iran	87.60
Iraq	80.00
Pakistan	91.00
Turkey	88.50

What we can conclude is that it is erroneous to consider Muslim values about a man beating his wife is just wrong compared to Americans.

Now this is the reality. Bill Gates wants people to get the fake view that the American number is 99% or whatever and Muslim numbers are 30% etc. These fake propaganda techniques cannot hold up any reputation for long. Reputations are a result of actual truth not lies and fake propaganda.
